Leading with integrity

Nobby Lewendowski shares a powerful checklist of leadership qualities that build and deliver integrity. How would those that we lead grade us on our “Integrity Report Card”?

Do we:

- Accept responsibility for our decisions and actions, protecting the reputation of our families, company, and profession, avoiding even the appearance of wrongdoing and taking action to correct or even prevent the unethical conduct of others.
- Consider others equal to ourselves in a caring, kind, compassionate, respectful and helpful manner.
- Use our power to serve others in a fair, open-minded, and just manner, being willing to admit our mistakes and change position when appropriate.
- Pursue excellence in meeting our professional duties, staying well-informed as we seek to improve our competencies.
- Coach, stimulate, and develop those that we lead to think independently and creatively.
- Express informed views, respect the democratic process, and make certain that others have the information needed to perform their roles in the organization.

As we go about our work this week, let’s use this checklist to guide our work. I think we will like our “final grade” if we do!

Have a great start to your week!
